

INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL SOCIOLOGY

CALL FOR PAPERS 2012-2013

International Political Sociology is the fifth journal supported by the International Studies Association. It responds to the need for more productive collaboration among sociologists, international relations specialists and sociopolitical theorists. Being a venue for theoretical and empirical innovation in the field of international relations, IPS strongly encourages transdisciplinary analysis of contemporary world phenomena by offering a meeting space for scholars from all over the world. Issues of special concern are the challenges arising from contemporary transformations of social, political, and global orders given the statist forms of traditional sociologies and the marginalization of social processes in many approaches to international relations. IPS draws especially on traditions of historical, legal, economic, cultural and political sociology, as well as on the burgeoning literature on socio-political theory, anthropology and human geography. It is committed to theoretical innovation, new modes of empirical research and the geographical and cultural diversification of research beyond the usual circuits of European and North-American scholarship.

Since its first issue in 2007, IPS has become a major platform for research that takes our understanding of the international out of the comfort zone of familiar approaches. The journal encourages in particular submissions of innovative and critical work at the interstices of the social, the political and the international.

Equally importantly for developing new knowledge of contemporary and past processes of internationalization, globalization and (de)colonization is attracting cutting edge research from scholars located outside of North America and Western Europe.

IPS seeks to respond pro-actively to the increasing global character of international studies. It recognizes that styles of writing and argumentation differ between research cultures and that these differences matter substantively. International Political Sociology retains a strong commitment to making the interplays between “international,” “political,” and “social”—and the limits of formulating questions in terms of this conceptual triptych—a matter of both stylistic pluralism and substantive experimentation.

More concretely, because of its commitment to a global reach IPS allows for submission in languages other than English. As long as the editorial team can arrange for proper anonymous peer reviews in the language of submission, authors will only be asked to arrange for translation into English if the article is accepted for publication. Please contact IPS editorial office—ips@puc-rio.br—if you would like to know more about submitting in other languages than English.

IPS also regularly publishes a virtual special issue that is freely accessible. The virtual special issue brings together already published articles that relate to a topical question. This issue is accessible via the IPS website: http://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/journal/10.1111/\(ISSN\)1749-5687/homepage/virtual_issue_between_the_social_and_the_political_-_interstitial_theorizing_of.htm1749-5687/homepage/virtual_issue_between_the_social_and_the_political_-_interstitial_theorizing_of.htm)

Short Submission Guidelines

IPS is published quarterly in March, June, September, and December.

Manuscripts will be accepted for review on the understanding that their content is original and that the manuscript has not been accepted for publication or review elsewhere. Manuscripts that fall within the aims and scope of IPS or clearly related to international political sociology must be sent electronically to ips@puc-rio.br. They should not exceed 10,000 words and should be sent in two files (preferably Word or PDF files): one file should be sent ready for double blind peer review: author shall have removed all self-references and all characteristic that may identify him or her (name, affiliation, title of conference if paper presented in a conference...). The other one should contain the manuscript with all necessary information. Both files should contain a short abstract of the article and keywords. Once received, the article will be sent to relevant outside experts and scholars for a double anonymous peer review. All new items are published on a space available basis and decisions made on publication are the discretion of the editors of IPS.

In order to help broaden the community engaging in international studies, the journal will facilitate the submission of articles in languages other than English. If the article is accepted for publication, the translation into English of the final version of the article should be taken care of by the author.
